JUNK number nine, a normal and paranormal antique store, was burgled. One of the burglars tipped over a statue of a winged woman. When the employees cleaned up the mess, they discovered a small silver box. Inside was a little piece of white bone, the size of a thumb nail. Along with it was a note written in old French. The bone is all that is left of Joan of Arc, who was burned at the stake May 30, 1431. Nelena Sortier, a French-Canadian woman working at JUNK, has a strong urge to turn it over the church in Rouen, France that is named after Joan of Arc. A splinter radical group finds out about the relic and believes that it holds mystical powers that can help them overthrow the French government. They steal it. Skyler Dawkins (one of the owners of JUNK) and two of her friends decide to go after the culprits and a deadly chase through the underground catacombs of Rouen results. At the same time, Tyler Dawkins (brother to Skyler and owner of JUNK) is in a chase to save a kidnapped woman and her baby. The kidnapers want two valises that contain secret German documents from World War Two. The kidnapping and satchels end up related to Joan of Arc's relic.

Vamsa is a dynamic genre of Buddhist history filled with otherworldly characters and the exploits of real-life heroes. These narratives collapse the temporal distance between Buddha and the reader, building an emotionally resonant connection with an outsized religious figure and a longed-for past. The fifth-century Pali text Mahavamsa is a particularly effective example, using metaphor and other rhetorical devices to ethically transform readers, to stimulate and then to calm them. Reading the Mahavamsa advocates a new, literary approach to this text by revealing its embedded reading advice (to experience samvega and pasada) and affective work of metaphors (the Buddha's dharma as light) and salient characters (nagas). Kristin Scheible argues that the Mahavamsa requires a particular kind of reading. In the text's proem, special instructions draw readers to the metaphor of light and the nagas, or salient snake-beings, of the first chapter. Nagas are both model worshippers and unworthy hoarders of Buddha's relics. As nonhuman agents, they challenge political and historicist readings of the text. Scheible sees these slippery characters and the narrative's potent and playful metaphors as techniques for refocusing the reader's attention on the text's emotional aims. Her work explains the Mahavamsa's central motivational role in contemporary Sri Lankan Buddhist and nationalist circles. It also speaks broadly to strategies of reading religious texts and to the internal and external cues that give such works lives beyond the page.
